MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Patrick Mullane Maxfield (“petitioner” or “Maxfield”), a federal prisoner, has filed a “Motion Under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 To Vacate, Set Aside, Or Correct Sentence By A Person In Federal Custody,” [Doc. 100]¹. The United States has responded in opposition, [Doc. 106], and petitioner has replied, [Doc. 111]. The matter is, therefore, ripe for disposition. The Court has determined that the files and records in the case conclusively establish that Maxfield is not entitled to relief under § 2255 and no evidentiary hearing is necessary. For the reasons which follow, petitioner’s motion will be DENIED and the case DISMISSED.

I. Procedural and Factual Background

Maxfield and co-defendant, April Bell (“Bell”), were indicted by a federal grand jury on September 11, 2012, and charged with conspiring to produce child pornography in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 2251(a) and (e) (Count One), and conspiracy to transport, distribute, and receive child pornography in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 2252(a)(1), (a)(2), and (b)(1) (Count Three). Maxfield was charged in Count Five with receipt of child pornography in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 2252A(a)(1) and (a)(2). Maxfield was not charged in counts two and four of the indictment.

After the appearance of retained counsel and considerable motion practice, Maxfield filed a notice of intent to plead guilty on April 18, 2013, [Doc. 48],² and a negotiated plea agreement was filed with the Court on April 23, 2013, [Doc. 50]. Pursuant to the plea agreement, petitioner pled guilty on the same day to Count Five, the knowing receipt of child pornography. [Doc. 51]. In the plea agreement made pursuant to Rule 11(c)(1)(C) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the parties agreed that a term of “sixty months imprisonment is the appropriate term of imprisonment for disposition of this case,” along with any lawful term of supervised release. [Doc. 50, at ¶ 6]. The plea agreement also contained a waiver of petitioner’s right to file a direct appeal as long as his sentence was within “the sentencing guideline range or any applicable mandatory minimum (whichever is greater) as determined by the district court,” and his right to collaterally attack his conviction or sentence, except for claims of ineffective assistance of counsel or prosecutorial misconduct. [Id. at ¶ 9].

The Court ordered a presentence investigation report (“PSR”) and scheduled a sentencing hearing for September 16, 2013. Petitioner faced a statutory mandatory minimum of five years of imprisonment to a maximum term of 20 years. The PSR established his guideline range for imprisonment at 78 to 97 months, [PSR, ¶¶ 87, 88], and a range of five years to life on supervised release. [Id. at ¶ 92]. At sentencing on September 16, 2013, the Court adopted the PSR, accepted the Rule 11(c)(1)(C) plea agreement, and sentenced petitioner to a 60-month term of imprisonment, imposed a lifetime term of supervised release, ordered restitution in the amount of $6,910.00, and imposed a $100.00 mandatory assessment. Among other conditions of supervised release, the Court ordered that petitioner have no contact with his co-defendant Bell. [Docs. 66, 83]. Judgment was entered on September 25, 2013, [Doc. 67].

² The notice does not limit itself to a specific count of the indictment. Apparently, Maxfield’s intent was to plead guilty to all counts in which he was charged.

Maxfield filed a pro se notice of appeal on September 26, 2013, [Doc. 68]. The Sixth Circuit granted the government's motion to dismiss the appeal on the basis of the appellate-waiver provisions of petitioner's plea agreement on April 23, 2014, but also found that "the district court neither abused its discretion nor committed plain error in imposing the [no-contact] condition because the condition addresses a valid concern regarding the safety and welfare of Bell."³ [Doc. 86]. Petitioner's petition for a writ of certiorari was denied by the United States Supreme Court on July 27, 2014. [Doc. 87]. The instant § 2255 motion was then timely filed on July 17, 2015.

Maxfield's plea agreement contained the following stipulated statement of facts:

a) The defendant met codefendant April Nicole Bell in November 2008 via an online internet chatroom. At that time, defendant Maxfield resided in El Paso County, Colorado and Bell resided in Johnson County, Tennessee. This relationship continued until the defendant and Bell were arrested on the instant charges in September 2012.

b) The relationship between defendant and Bell progressed and Bell traveled from the Eastern District of Tennessee to defendant's home at 1145 Modell Drive, Colorado Springs, in El Paso County, Colorado. The defendant and Bell became intimate. The defendant and Bell periodically met at defendant's home. When they were not physically together, the defendant and Bell communicated with each other on a regular basis via telephones, electronic mail, text messaging, instant messaging, and other means of electronic communications. The parties agree that these communications traveled in interstate commerce from the Eastern District of Tennessee to the District of Colorado and vice-versa.

c) At all relevant times, Bell operated a personal computer from her home in the Eastern District of Tennessee, with access to the internet provided by Sprint, an internet service provider.

d) From on or about August 1, 2009 to on or about October 31, 2009, Bell downloaded seven images of child pornography onto her personal computer located at 394 Old Butler Road,

Apartment B, Mountain City, Johnson County in the Eastern District of Tennessee. Bell provided the seven images of child pornography to defendant by remotely accessing defendant's computer and storing these images on defendant's computer. At the time Bell transmitted these images to defendant's computer, the defendant knew that the seven images would be transported from the Eastern District of Tennessee to Colorado.

e) The parties agree that between August 1, 2009 and February 1, 2011, defendant knowingly received the seven images of child pornography sent from Bell's computer. The parties agree that defendant knowingly received the seven images of child pornography on his computer contemporaneously with these events and that the defendant directed Bell to send the seven images of child pornography to him.

f) The parties agree that defendant knowingly received seven images of child pornography from April Nicole Bell between August 1, 2009 and February 1, 2011 via the internet, which is a means of interstate commerce.

g) The parties agree that the seven distributed images depict an actual minor engaged in sexually explicit conduct as defined in 18 U.S.C. § 2256(2)(A)(v) to include the lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area of a minor.

h) The defendant admits that at the time he received the seven images of child pornography, he was aware of their sexually explicit nature and character and he was aware that they depict an actual minor engaged in sexually explicit conduct, including the lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area of a minor.

i) The parties agree that defendant received the seven images of child pornography transported in interstate commerce from the Eastern District of Tennessee to the District of Colorado.

[Doc. 50, ¶¶ 4(a) – 4(i)]. The PSR contained the following unobjected to statement of additional facts:

The investigation in this case began in February of 2011, when a hospital health care worker in Colorado Springs, Colorado, reported that co-defendant Bell appeared to be a victim of violent domestic abuse. The El Paso County, Colorado, Sheriff's Office interviewed Bell, who admitted that the numerous bruises, lacerations, and injuries she received had been inflicted by her boyfriend and co-defendant, Patrick Maxfield.

Co-defendant Bell reported that she was a resident of Johnson County, Tennessee, who had met the defendant via an adult online chat room in late 2008/early 2009. The relationship eventually became sexual, after the defendant financed Bell's trip to Colorado Springs, Colorado. For approximately two years (2009-2011), Bell periodically flew from east Tennessee to Colorado Springs, where she cohabitated with the defendant for 10 to 14 days each time. They engaged in consensual sexual intercourse during these visits.

During 2010, it appeared the relationship evolved into the classical battered wife syndrome. The defendant found fault with Bell's behavior, beat her, she apologized and accepted punishment from him in the form of more beatings and written "improvement contracts." The defendant allegedly beat Bell with a 2-inch wooden dowel, an aluminum baseball bat, a crowbar, and a fire extinguisher. He kept separate sets of work gloves in his apartment, labeled for different types of beatings he inflicted on Bell (for example, this is for the bitch when she doesn't do her chores). The defendant left written notes to Bell, and she signed other written notes as, "MWPS," which is an acronym for "Most Worthless Piece of Shit."

Co-defendant Bell is the mother of [AB], whose date of birth is ____, __, 2004. Bell left [AB] in the custody of her parents when she visited the defendant in Colorado.

Based on Bell's interview, the El Paso County Sheriff's Office obtained a state court search warrant to search the defendant's apartment in Colorado Springs for the instruments of domestic violence. They executed the first search warrant on February 7, 2011, and during the course of the search, they found the first of multiple "contracts" between Bell and the defendant which were suggestive of extreme violence. The Sheriff's Office obtained a second search warrant for indicia of ownership, indicia of occupancy, indicia of abuse, documents bearing evidence of physiological or physical abuse, which was executed on February 7, 2011. During the course of the second search warrant, the officers found inter alia, a copy of the birth certificate and identification card for [AB] and a deeply disturbing document in a file cabinet, in a folder labeled "April Bell." The document provided as follows.

"Dear Diary, I, April Bell, am hereby agreeing to repay Patrick for the full amount of an airline ticket for [my daughter, AB] to fly out to Colorado Springs to visit. The purpose of this visit is so Patrick can f--k her little girl p---y and cum her vagina. I also give Patrick full permission to Patrick to cum in her mouth while [AB] is sucking Pat's big c--k. This visit in December 2009 is intended solely for the purpose of Patrick getting his jollies off with [AB]. Patrick has full permission to bend [AB] over and F--k her doggystyle, and to bounce [AB] off his c--k! I give permission for Patrick to urinate in [AB's] vagina, and insert various objects into her ass and vagina - penetrating her and getting [AB] off. I further agree to hold Patrick and/or [AB] up in case either lose consciousness or pass out from too much excitement. Patrick is hereby Released from all Liability. Patrick is not responsible for any loss or damages to [AB] that may result from any of the above listed actions. The above list is not all inclusive, and other things can and will result – as long as the end results is Patrick cuming all over/or in [AB].

The document was dated October 23, 2009, and signed with Bell's signature and printed name, along with the title "Parent of [AB]." Graphic stick figures are included as well as sexual connotations for the figures. After finding this document, the officers suspended their search and obtained and executed a third search warrant. Items seized included the defendant's computer, which was provided to Detective Mark Pfoff for forensic examination.

On February 7, 2011, the El Paso County Sheriff's Office interviewed Bell and the defendant at the police station. Defendant Maxfield admitted that he had corresponded with [AB] via telephone and computer, but had never personally met the child. He admitted that he and Bell had discussed Bell transporting [AB] to Colorado Springs for a visit with him. His interview terminated when he requested an attorney.

On February 8, 2011, the officers interviewed Bell. She stated that the defendant forced her to write the document about [AB], admitted it was her handwriting and signature, and admitted that the defendant "kind of controlled me." She stated that the defendant expected her to fly [AB] out to Colorado to meet him, but she had no intention of allowing her to visit with him. Co-defendant Bell otherwise denied the symptoms of battered wife syndrome and apologized for the defendant's behavior.

On February 18, 2011, Detective Pfoff completed a pre-review of the defendant's computer and located images of what appeared to be child pornography. He then suspended his examination and obtained a fourth search warrant to conduct a complete examination of the defendant's computer and storage media. That search yielded seven images of what was later identified as [AB], age approximately 5 years old, in the lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic areas. The seven images were labeled "slut one, two, ..." and found in a computer folder labeled "[AB], the one and only." The images depict [AB] in various stages of nudity, and in provocative poses focusing on her vagina and her anus. Most of the images incorporate symbols of sexuality (poses) along with symbols of young childhood (pigtails, stuffed animals).

On March 2, 2011, [AB] was interviewed by Stephanie Furches, a Forensic Interviewer with the Johnson County, Tennessee Children's Advocacy Center in Mountain City, Tennessee. [AB] refused to discuss the photographs, but stated that she "knows Patrick Maxfield and has engaged in conversations with him via the computer with her mother present."

On March 9, 2011, the El Paso County Sheriff's Office conducted another interview of Bell, during which she admitted that she made the seven images of her daughter between August 2009 and October 2009, while residing in Tennessee. She stated she downloaded the images from a digital camera to her computer in Tennessee and then remotely accessed the defendant's computer and downloaded those seven images of [AB] on the defendant's computer. Co-defendant Bell also admitted that the defendant sent gifts to [AB] during this same time frame in 2009 via the United States mail (which had been confirmed during the search warrants). There is no evidence that the defendant has ever physically contacted [AB], who has not traveled to Colorado Springs.

The El Paso County Sheriff's Office and District Attorney charged the defendant with domestic violence against April Bell and with possession of child sexual exploitation images. Defendant Maxfield was released on bond pending his trial. When Bell failed to obey a subpoena issued to her to appear for the preliminary hearing, the Colorado judge issued a warrant for her arrest. She remained in a fugitive status until early August 2012, when she was arrested.

II. Standard of Review

This Court must vacate and set aside petitioner’s sentence if it finds that “the judgment was rendered without jurisdiction, or that the sentence imposed was not authorized by law or otherwise open to collateral attack, or that there has been such a denial or infringement of the constitutional rights of the prisoner as to render the judgment vulnerable to collateral attack, . . .” 28 U.S.C. § 2255. Under Rule 4 of the Governing Rules, the Court is to consider initially whether the face of the motion itself, together with the annexed exhibits and prior proceedings in the case, reveal the movant is not entitled to relief. If it plainly appears the movant is not entitled to relief, the court may summarily dismiss the § 2255 motion under Rule 4.

When a defendant files a § 2255 motion, he must set forth facts which entitle him to relief. Green v. Wingo, 454 F.2d 52, 53 (6th Cir. 1972); O’Malley v. United States, 285 F.2d 733, 735 (6th Cir. 1961). “Conclusions, not substantiated by allegations of fact with some probability of verity, are not sufficient to warrant a hearing.” O’Malley, 285 F.2d at 735 (citations omitted). A motion that merely states general conclusions of law without substantiating allegations with facts is without legal merit. Loum v. Underwood, 262 F.2d 866, 867 (6th Cir. 1959); United States v. Johnson, 940 F. Supp. 167, 171 (W.D. Tenn. 1996).

To warrant relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 because of constitutional error, the error must be one of constitutional magnitude which had a substantial and injurious effect or influence on the proceedings. Brecht v. Abrahamson, 507 U.S. 619, 637 (1993) (citation omitted) (§ 2254 case); Clemmons v. Sowders, 34 F. 3d 352, 354 (6th Cir. 1994). See also United States v. Cappas, 29 F.3d 1187, 1193 (7th Cir. 1994) (applying Brecht to a § 2255 motion). If the sentencing court lacked jurisdiction, then the conviction is void and must be set aside. Williams v. United States, 582 F. 2d 1039, 1041 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 988 (1978). To warrant relief for a non-constitutional error, petitioner must show a fundamental defect in the proceeding that resulted in a complete miscarriage of justice or an egregious error inconsistent with the rudimentary demands of fair procedure. Reed v. Farley, 512 U.S. 339, 354 (1994); Grant v. United States, 72 F. 3d 503, 506 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 517 U.S. 1200 (1996). In order to obtain collateral relief under § 2255, a petitioner must clear a significantly higher hurdle than would exist on direct appeal. United States v. Frady, 456 U.S. 152 (1982).

A petitioner alleging ineffective assistance of counsel must satisfy a two-part test. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668, 687 (1984). See also, Huff v. United States, 734 F.3d 600, 606 (6th Cir. 2013). First, the Petitioner must establish, by identifying specific acts or omissions, that counsel's performance was deficient and that counsel did not provide "reasonably effective assistance," as measured by "prevailing professional norms." Rompilla v. Beard, 545 U.S. 374, 380 (2005). Counsel is presumed to have provided effective assistance, and the Petitioner bears the burden of showing otherwise. Mason v. Mitchell, 320 F.3d 604, 616-17 (6th Cir. 2003); see also Strickland, 466 U.S. at 689 (a reviewing court "must indulge a strong presumption that counsel's conduct falls within the wide range of reasonable professional assistance; that is, the defendant must overcome the presumption that . . . the challenged action might be considered sound trial strategy") (internal citation omitted).

Second, the Petitioner must demonstrate "a reasonable probability that, but for [counsel's acts or omissions], the result of the proceedings would have been different." Strickland, 466 U.S. at 694. "An error by counsel, even if professionally unreasonable, does not warrant setting aside the judgment of a criminal proceeding if the error had no effect on the judgment." Id. at 691; see also Smith v. Robbins, 528 U.S. 259, 285-86 (2000). The Court is not required to analyze both prongs of the Strickland test as to every claim. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 697. Indeed, the Supreme Court recommended that, “[i]f it is easier to dispose of an ineffectiveness claim on the ground of lack of sufficient prejudice, . . . that course should be followed.” Id.; accord United States v. Hynes, 467 F.3d 951, 970 (6th Cir. 2006).

III. Analysis

It is somewhat difficult to decipher the precise contours of petitioner’s claims from the body of his motion, [Doc. 100], the memorandum filed in support of the motion, [Doc. 101], Maxfield’s affidavit, [Doc. 101-1], and a separate “Memorandum of Law With Regards to No-Contact Order.” [Doc. 101-2]. Here is how he states his grounds in his motion:

Ground One: Ineffective assistance of counsel: Petitioner’s plea was not knowing and voluntary with regards to appeal waiver.

Ground Two: Ineffective assistance of counsel: At sentencing, counsel refused to honor petitioner’s request to argue that no-contact order of common-law spouse was unconstitutional and illegal.

[Doc. 100]. In addition, petitioner argues in his memorandum that his guilty plea was not knowing and voluntary because Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure was not complied with. [Doc. 101 at 6]. He appears to add three more claims in his “Memorandum of Law With Regards to No-Contact Order,” which he states as follows:

A. The supervised release [sic] condition prohibiting contact between the petitioner and his common-law wife, April Nicole Bell, is unconstitutional in that it effectively annuls their marriage, thus violating Petitioner’s fundamental rights as guaranteed by the First and Fifth Amendments to the United States Constitution.

B. The Supervised Release condition prohibiting contact between Petitioner and his common law wife is unconstitutional in that it effectively annuls their state sanctioned marriage thus violating the United States Constitution by intruding into an area of law that is the “virtually exclusive province of the States.”

C. The district court had no statutory authority to enter a No-Contact Order as a Special Condition of Supervised Release between the Petitioner and his co-defendant and common law wife, April Nicole Bell.

[Doc. 101-2 at 1, 3, 7]. The United States responds that counsel did not render deficient performance by not predicting that the Court would impose a no-contact special condition of supervised release and that, even if it did, petitioner cannot establish prejudice from the failure because the outcome of the proceeding would have been the same. [Doc. 106].

In one way or another, all of petitioner's claims revolve around a single argument, i.e., that the Court lacked constitutional and/or statutory authority to impose the special condition of supervised release that he have no-contact with his co-defendant and alleged common-law wife, April Nicole Bell.⁴ Because the argument lacks merit, the Court will address that issue first.

Under 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d), the Court may order a special condition of supervised release if it “(1) is reasonably related to the factors set forth in [18 U.S.C. §] 3553(a)(1), (a)(2)(B), (a)(2)(C), and (a)(2)(D); (2) involves no greater deprivation of liberty than is reasonably necessary for the purposes set forth in [18 U.S.C. §] 3553(a)(2)(B), (a)(2)(C), and (a)(2)(D); and (3) is consistent with any pertinent policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a).” 18 U.S.C. § 3583(d). If a condition of supervised release is “reasonably related to the dual goals of . . . rehabilitation of the defendant and the protection of the public,” it will be reversed on appeal “only in comparatively extreme circumstances.” United States v. Kingsley, 241 F.3d 828, 835 (6th Cir. 2001) (citing United States v. Ritter, 118 F.3d 502, 504 (6th Cir. 1997)).

While it is not at all clear from the record that petitioner and Bell are legally married at common-law⁵, Colorado does recognize such unions, see In re Marriage of Cargill, 843 P.2d 1335 (Colo. 1993), and the Court will assume a proper and legal marriage for the purpose of deciding this § 2255 motion. Marriage is a constitutionally protected relationship, Obergefell v. Hodges, --- U.S. ---, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2599 (2015) (citing Loring v. Virginia, 388 U. S. 1 (1967) and other cases), but those convicted of crimes lose a measure of their liberties. See Griffin v. Wisconsin, 483 U. S. 868, 874 (1987). “Thus, special conditions that restrict constitutional rights are upheld so long as they (1) are directly related to deterring the defendant and protecting the public and (2) are narrowly tailored.” United States v. Crandon, 173 F.3d 122, 128 (3d Cir. 1999). See also United States v. Smalcer, 464 Fed. App’x 469 (6th Cir. 2012) (district court’s order that, as a condition of supervised release, defendant not have any contact with wife or children without court order, was justified).

The no-contact order in this case was fully justified. Even though the Court did not fully set out the reasons on the record at sentencing because there was no objection raised, the record is replete with the reasons for the restriction. The no-contact order is clearly reasonably related to

A common law marriage is established by mutual consent or agreement of the parties to be husband and wife, followed by a mutual and open assumption of a marital relationship. People v. Lucerno, 747 F.2d 660 (Colo. 1987). Absent an express agreement, the two factors considered the most reliable in determining whether an intent to be married has been established are cohabitation and a general reputation in the community that the parties hold themselves out as husband and wife. Whitehall v. Kiser Permanente, 940 P.2d 1129, 1132 (Colo. App. 1997).

[Doc. 101-2 at 1]. Although Bell and Maxfield have asserted in their pleadings that they are married at common-law, their pleadings are not supported by any affidavit or other information from which the Court could necessarily conclude that an intent to marry has been established. The only information provided, despite Maxfield’s assertion of an intimate relationship of seven years, is that over a two year period, he and Bell cohabited “periodically” for 10 to 14 days each time. Nothing is found in the record to support any open assumption and communication to the public of their marital status nor a general reputation in the community that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife.

detering the defendant and to protecting the public, including Bell and her minor daughter, the victim in this case. As set forth above, Bell, who lived in Johnson County, Tennessee made pornographic images of her five year old daughter and, at Maxfield's direction, provided the images to Maxfield in Colorado by remotely accessing Maxfield's computer and storing the images on the computer. After Bell was interviewed at a hospital in Colorado Springs where she was admitted with "numerous bruises, lacerations, and injuries" inflicted by Maxfield, a search warrant was obtained to search petitioner's apartment in Colorado Springs for the instruments of domestic violence. Bell's and Maxfield's relationship was apparently "the classic battered wife syndrome." According to Bell, when Maxfield found fault with her behavior, he beat her and they entered into written "improvement contracts." Maxfield allegedly beat Bell with a 2-inch wooden dowel, an aluminum baseball bat, a crowbar, and a fire extinguisher. Maxfield "kept separate sets of work gloves" which were "labeled for different types of beatings he inflicted on Bell (for example, this is for the bitch when she doesn't do her chores)." During the first search on February 7, 2011, officers found the first of multiple "contracts." The sheriff's office obtained and executed a second search warrant.

During the course of the second search, officers found a copy of Bell's minor daughter's birth certificate and identification card and a file folder labeled "April Bell." Inside the folder was a document, dated October 23, 2009, which read as follows:

Dear Diary, I, April Bell, am hereby agreeing to repay Patrick for the full amount of an airline ticket for [my daughter, AB] to fly out to Colorado Springs to visit. The purpose of this visit is so Patrick can f---k her little girl p---y and cum her vagina. I also give Patrick full permission to Patrick to cum in her mouth while [AB] is sucking Pat's big c - - k. This visit in December, 2009 is intended solely for the purpose of Patrick getting his jollies off with [AB]. Patrick has full permission to bend [AB] over and F--k her doggiestyle, and to bounce [AB] off his c--k! I give permission for Patrick to urinate in [AB's] vagina, and insert various objects into her ass and vagina – penetrating her and getting [AB] off. I further agree to hold Patrick and/or [AB] up in case either lose consciousness or pass out from too much excitement. Patrick is hereby Released from all Liability. Patrick is not responsible for any loss or damages to [AB] that may result from any of the above listed actions. The above list is not all inclusive, and other things can and will result – as long as the end results is Patrick cuming all over/or in [AB].

[PSR, ¶ 21]. The document, signed by Bell as “Parent of [AB],” included graphic figures with sexual connotations.

After this document was found, a third search warrant was obtained and Maxfield’s computer was seized. A forensic examination of the computer yielded seven images of Bell’s five-year-old daughter in the lascivious exhibition of the genitals or pubic area. The images were labeled “Slut 1, 2 . . .” and found in a folder labeled “[child’s name], the one and only.” In a February 7, 2009 interview, Maxfield admitted that he had corresponded with the child by telephone and computer but had never personally met the child. He admitted he and Bell had discussed transporting the child to Colorado Springs to visit with Maxfield. During an interview with Bell, she told Colorado officers that Maxfield had forced her to write the October 29 document and that “he kind of controlled [her].”⁶ She said she and Maxfield had discussed having the child fly out to Colorado but that she had no intention of doing so. She also stated that Maxfield had sent gifts to the child in Tennessee.

In May, 2013, Maxfield sent a letter to Bell’s attorney, requesting that he deliver it to Bell. The letter expressed Maxfield’s love for Bell’s minor daughter. The letter stated [to Bell]: “I miss pulling your hair so much but I promise to yank the hell out of it when we are done with all this hell.”

Maxfield’s relationship with Bell was apparently not his only involvement with exploitation of females or sexual exploitation of a minor. In 1999, Maxfield was charged with three counts of sexual exploitation of a child. Although the charges were ultimately dismissed, further evidence of the petitioner’s controlling personality and behavior is found in the circumstances surrounding those charges. Maxfield, 21-years old at the time, was accused of sexual exploitation and harassment of two underage females. Sexual conduct involving Maxfield and the two was videotaped and Maxfield admitted to the relationships but claimed they were consensual. During the course of that investigation, a handwritten list Maxfield provided to one of the victims surfaced. The list contained numerous “directions” from Maxfield to the victim on how to handle the situation with her father and gain his acceptance. Of significance, Maxfield threatened and verbally abused the victim, telling her at one time that he would “cut her up and send her to her father in pieces.” Records from individual psychotherapy sessions between 1996 and 1999 and again in 2002 showed a primary diagnosis for Maxfield of “Schizotypal Personality Disorder” with the following: “behaviors and appearance that were odd, eccentric, and peculiar; odd beliefs and/or magical thinking that influences his behaviors; obsessive ruminations, often with sexual or aggressive contents; vague, circumstantial, metaphorical, overelaborate or stereotyped thinking, manifested by odd speech patterns and incoherent rambling; and transient quasi- psychotic episodes with intense illusions, auditory or other hallucinations and delusions.” [PSR, ¶ 75].

The no-contact order was thus reasonably related to a number of the 3553(a) factors, including the protection of the public and Bell. Maxfield has exhibited threatening, assaultive and controlling behavior towards Bell and others, he and Bell conspired in the production of pornographic videos of Bell's child, and it is apparent that Maxfield was "grooming⁷" Bell's minor child for illegal sexual contact. The condition is clearly necessary to protect Bell herself, her child, and other minors from threats and assaults at the hands of Maxfield. It is just as clear that Bell, who had no prior criminal history, is easily manipulated by Maxfield and thus needing of protection from him.

The facts above resolve, in large part, the claims advanced by petitioner. The Court will address briefly, however, the specific claims of ineffective assistance of counsel raised by petitioner in his motion.

Petitioner alleges that, had he been informed by counsel of the possibility of a no-contact with April Bell condition of supervised release, "he would have demanded that the right to appeal such an Order be preserved or would have entered an open plea." As a result, he claims his appellate waiver was not knowing and voluntary. Maxfield makes it clear that he does not challenge his guilt or his term of imprisonment, only the no-contact term of supervised release. With this claim, petitioner appears to argue that both counsel and the Court had an obligation to inform him, before his guilty plea, that the Court could impose the no-contact condition.

A guilty plea, entered by a defendant who is "fully aware of the direct consequences, including the value of any commitments made to him by the court, prosecutor, or his own counsel, must stand unless induced by threats, misrepresentation (including unfulfilled or unfulfillable promises), or perhaps by promises that are by their nature improper as having no proper relationship to the prosecutor's business (e.g., bribes).” Mabry v. Johnson, 467 U.S. 504, 509 (1973). A defendant “need only be aware of the direct consequences of the plea, however; the trial court is under no obligation to inform the defendant of all the possible collateral consequences of the plea.” King v. Dutton, 17 F.3d 151, 153 (6th Cir. 1994). The Sixth Circuit has stated that “the distinction between a direct and collateral consequence turns on whether the result flowing from the plea is definite, immediate, and automatic.” Id. at 154 (and cases cited therein). A consequence is “direct” where it presents “a definite, immediate and largely automatic effect on the defendant’s range of punishment,” United States v. Wills, 881 F.2d 823, 825 (9th Cir. 1989), but the consequence is “collateral” where it lies within the discretion of the court to impose it. Id.; see also United States v. Kikuyama, 109 F.3d 536, 537 (9th Cir. 1997).

Maxfield’s plea agreement contains the following provision: “The defendant agrees not to file a direct appeal of the defendant’s conviction or sentence except the defendant retains the right to appeal a sentence imposed above the sentencing guideline range or any applicable mandatory minimum sentence (whichever is greater) as determined by the district court.” [Doc. 50, ¶ 9]. Maxfield now complains that he would not have agreed to that provision if he had known of the possibility of the no-contact condition but rather would have entered an “open” plea or “demanded that his right to appeal be preserved.”

But neither the Court nor counsel was required to inform petitioner of this collateral consequence of his guilty plea. The consequences of the supervised release condition to which Maxfield now objects were not immediate nor automatic, i.e., a direct consequence. Because the Court had discretion to impose or reject the special condition requested by the government in this case, the Court’s decision to impose the no-contact condition is a “collateral” consequence of the plea. See United States v. Goddard, 537 F.3d 1087, 1089 (9th Cir. 2008). See also United States

v. Daas, 1995 WL 583384 at *2-*3 (6th Cir. Oct. 3, 1995). Nothing in Rule 11 or the Constitution requires the Court to advise the defendant of all possible collateral consequences of his guilty plea, King, 17 F.3d at 153, and it is well settled that where a court scrupulously follows the requirements of Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 11 “the defendant is bound by his statements in response to that court’s inquiry.” Baker v. United States, 781 F.2d 85, 90 (6th Cir. 1986) (quoting Moore v. Estelle, 526 F.2d 690, 696-97 (5th Cir. 1976)). The record establishes that this Court painstakingly followed the Rule 11 requirements and, as found at the change of plea hearing, the petitioner’s plea of guilty was knowing and voluntary. His under oath answers to the Court’s questions clearly established that the plea was knowledgeably and voluntarily made.

Counsel’s failure to advise a defendant of the collateral consequences of his or her plea “is not objectively unreasonable and therefore does not amount to ineffective assistance,” United States v. Fry, 322 F.3d 1198, 1200 (9th Cir. 2003) (citing Torrey v. Estelle, 842 F.2d 234, 237 (9th Cir. 1988)), notwithstanding petitioner’s reliance on Padilla v. Kentucky, --- U.S. --- 130 S. Ct. 1473 (2010) in support of his argument that counsel should have advised him of the possibility of a no-contact condition of supervised release. Padilla does not go nearly as far as petitioner urges. In Padilla, the petitioner, an alien, claimed that counsel failed to advise him of the immigration consequences of his guilty plea, more specifically, the likelihood of removal as a result, something “nearly an automatic result for a broad class of non-citizen offenders.” Padilla, 130 S. Ct. at 1481. Finding that “[t]he weight of prevailing professional norms supports the view that counsel must advise his client regarding the risk of deportation,” id. at 1482, the Supreme Court held “that counsel must inform her client whether his plea carries a risk of deportation.” Id. at 1486. Padilla’s holding was specifically limited, however, to the deportation context and has not been extended beyond that context by the Sixth Circuit or the Supreme Court since Padilla was decided. Indeed, petitioner points to no case which has extended the holding of Padilla in the manner argued by him and Padilla is “not importable—either entirely or, at the very least, not readily importable—in the scenarios involving collateral consequences other than deportation.” United States v. Parrino, 2015 WL 4272022, at *11 (W.D. Ky. July 13, 2015) (quoting United States v. Suero, 2014 WL 6896011, at *6 n.2 (D.N.H. Dec. 5, 2014) (citing Brown v. Goodwin, No. 09-211 (D.N.J. May 11, 2010)). See also Rodriguez-Murano v. Oregon, 2011 WL 6980829, at * 4 (D. Ore. Nov. 15, 2011).

These claims relating to the voluntariness of petitioner’s guilty plea fail for two additional and very obvious reasons. First, petitioner’s argument is foreclosed by the Sixth Circuit’s prior holding that the appellate waiver provision was valid, i.e., voluntarily made, and therefore fully enforceable and petitioner had every opportunity to argue before the Sixth Circuit that his plea agreement and subsequent guilty plea were not voluntary because he was not informed of the possibility of the no-contact condition of supervision by counsel. Second, petitioner’s claim that, had he known of the possibility of the no-contact condition, he would have insisted on preserving the issue for appeal or would have entered an open plea, are not credible. Petitioner cannot show any likelihood that he could have successfully “demanded” such a provision in his plea agreement, something it is apparent he could not have unilaterally achieved without the government’s concurrence.⁸ Furthermore, if what Maxfield means by an “open” plea means that he would have pled guilty to the indictment without a plea agreement in order to preserve his right to appeal, such a position defies logic and common sense. Petitioner was able to limit his potential term of imprisonment through the Rule 11(c)(1)(C) plea agreement to 60 months, the mandatory minimum sentence for Count Five. Had he simply entered a plea of guilty to the indictment without a plea agreement, he would then have faced a mandatory minimum term of imprisonment on the production count alone of 15 years, ten years more than was agreed to in the Rule 11(c)(1)(C) plea agreement.

Petitioner also claims ineffective assistance of counsel in that he instructed/requested counsel to “argue against the no-contact Order,” and, had counsel done so, “the Court would not have imposed an illegal sentence.”⁹ Counsel, however, is not required to argue issues that lack merit, even in the face of a defendant’s request/instruction that he do so. Fautenberry v. Mitchell, 515 F.3d 614, 642 (6th Cir. 2008) (“effective assistance does not require counsel to raise every non-frivolous argument.”). But even if the Court assumes that counsel’s conduct was somehow deficient, Maxfield can show no prejudice, i.e., that the Court would not have imposed the condition had counsel made the argument. As set forth above, the no-contact order was neither unconstitutional nor illegal and petitioner has suggested no argument counsel could have made which would have persuaded the Court not to impose the condition in order to protect Bell, her minor daughter, and the public at large.

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Court holds that petitioner’s conviction and sentencing were not in violation of the constitution or laws of the United States and his motion to vacate, set aside or correct his sentence pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 2255 is DENIED.

Under 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2), the Court must determine whether a certificate of appealability should be granted. A certificate should issue if petitioner has demonstrated a “substantial showing of a denial of a constitutional right.” 28 U.S.C. § 2253(c)(2). The Sixth

Circuit Court of Appeals disapproves of the issuance of blanket denials of a certificate of appealability. Murphy v. Ohio, 263 F. 3d 466 (6th Cir. 2001). The District Court must “engage in a reasoned assessment of each claim” to determine whether a certificate is warranted. Id. at 467. Each issue must be considered under the standard set forth by the Supreme Court in Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473 (2000). Id.

Under Slack, to warrant a grant of the certificate, “[t]he petitioner must demonstrate that reasonable jurists would find the district court’s assessment of the constitutional claims debatable or wrong.” After reviewing each of Petitioner’s claims, the Court finds that reasonable jurists could not conclude that petitioner’s claims are adequate to deserve further review. Because petitioner has failed to make a substantial showing of the denial of a constitutional right, a certificate of appealability will not issue.
